This page contains a summary of how I use CAD during the development of a new yacht design, and then leverage that work to actually begin building the vessel by direct use of the computer-generated model. As an extension of this article, please also see our article about why we prefer NURBS Surface ...

A gulet (Turkish pronunciation:) is a traditional design of a two-masted or three-masted wooden sailing vessel (the most common design has two masts) from the southwestern coast of Turkey, particularly built in the coastal towns of Bodrum and Marmaris; although similar vessels can be found all around the eastern Mediterranean. Today, this type of vessel, varying in size from 14 to 35 metres ...

The V-boats were a group of nine United States Navy submarines built between World War I and World War II from 1921 to 1934. These were not a ship class in the usual sense of a series of nearly identical ships built from the same design, but shared authorization under the "fleet boat" program. The term "V-boats" as used includes five separate classes of submarines.

Periwinkle is very similar to Coquina in layout, rig, sail area, and size, but that was not my original intention. In fact, I was not thinking about Coquina at all during the hull design process. John Shrapnel (the owner) came to me for a design similar to my Phoenix III, but slightly larger, and he wanted a ketch rig of some sort. I told him that I thought that the boat would be slow to ...
